
Overview

The key aim of the bereavement training is to increase knowledge or care after death procedures, grief and bereavement (including suicide), develop an understanding in order to build confidence and enhance skills needed to work sensitively and empathically with families, carer's and others who experience loss and grief.

How Long is the Course?

1 Day

Maximum Number of Delegates – 20

Who is the Course Aimed at?

Any health care professional involved in the field of death, dying and bereavement will benefit from attending this training, particularly NHS, corporate, community, social services (adults & children), care home sector, schools, emergency services, voluntary sector or elsewhere their role. Potential participants should note that this training is interactive and practical rather than being based on a theoretical lecture style.

Learning Outcomes

- Improved awareness and understanding of the impact of loss, grief and bereavement
- Enhanced ability to recognise the uniqueness of an individual's response to death, dying and bereavement including social media
- Recognise the importance of accurate, timely, clear and detail information
- Become equipped and more confident in the practical, emotional and spiritual elements of working with bereaved families
- Build on the practical issues, existing best practice and national guidance
- Increase your ability to recognise when you may need support, whilst working with bereaved families